

Debian Project and SERPRO partnership preliminary report 1

Author: André Felipe Machado<andremachado@techforce.com.br>

SERPRO, the Brazilian IT government agency, has been advancing in its collaboration with Debian Project.

This is a first preliminary informal report about these advancements. This is not an official statement from Debian Project nor SERPRO, yet.

SERPRO is the Brazilian IT government company and the biggest IT one in Latin America.

It is an uphill battle. Changing culture from third party services consuming oriented government company to a hands-on one is not easy. Training is still lacking across the country company teams.

Another initiative, SERPRO desire to host a Debian mirror.

Yet another valuable initiative, Serpro will offer man hours of its employees to help Debian Project. An internal GForge was set up to group and track employees efforts. The first Debian related efforts at this mode will involve some tasks that Serpro has interest: APT bugs cleanup and php-java-bridge Debian improvements. These are the starters, and more tasks are expected. We hope to get a group of Serpro professionals contributing to Debian during business hours.

I have been working on Debian servers deployments and tuning for heavy loads these months, because of the partnership decision (as was the department transfer also). Many internal documents were produced to guide further Debian corporate deploymens to other deployment teams and I hope to adapt and translate some of them. Internal info could not be disclosed, of course. But there are valuable broad interest information that could be published.

Now we have to internally invite SERPRO employees to participate at these Debian efforts. If you have text suggestions to this, please contribute at Debian Publicity mailing list
